WHY THIS RESEARCH?

- → Right now, the biggest long-term threat to the U.S. economy is a shortage of workers.
- → Between 2010 and 2018, 85% of U.S.
   workforce growth came from immigrants and their children. Now through 2035, 100% of all working age population growth will come from immigrants.
- → Community Colleges are an Essential Gateway.

OUR PROJECT OBJECTIVES

Gain insights from community colleges in CA and TX to understand the best practices and gaps in career services offerings for immigrant student populations

Identify resources and strategies that can eliminate employment barriers for students from immigrant backgrounds

Coalesce stakeholders from across the community college ecosystem to advance this work

OUR METHODOLOGY

Our findings were informed by key stakeholder interviews and in-depth focus groups with community college practitioners across California and Texas, as well as national survey data from more than 80 college administrators.

Upwardly Global conducted this research between May and August 2023 with funding support from the Lumina Foundation and research partners at NCWE.

BEST PRACTICES & BRIGHT SPOTS

1) Increased focus on short-term credentials:

Community colleges are now offering micro-credentials and short-term certificates in response to job market needs, providing quick pathways to employment and career growth for diverse student populations.

2) Data collection:

Practitioners are acutely aware of the need to collect data tracking the backgrounds of immigrant-origin students as well as program outcomes, and some are moving in that direction.

3) Emphasis on case managers and career navigators:

A few institutions employ knowledgeable case managers to provide critical guidance and support to students at various points, such as intake, enrollment, ESL classes, and career plan mapping.

4) Building trust and a sense of community:

Several community college practitioners emphasize the importance of building trust and creating a sense of community to support immigrants and refugees.

ADDRESSING GAPS & BARRIERS

1) Insufficient data tracking on immigrants and refugees:

- Challenges in tracking data due to undocumented students' privacy concerns.
- Siloed data between departments, limiting efficacy and access.

Lack of differentiated career services for immigrants and refugees:

- General career services not tailored to immigrant students' unique needs.
- Services such as welcome centers, counseling, and apprenticeship programs often operate in isolation.

3) Difficulty building employer partnership pipelines:

- Challenges in forming skill-based partnerships with employers.
- Preference for traditional education and career pathways by some employers, disadvantaging immigrant professionals.

4) Limited resources and knowledge base to serve immigrants and refugees:

- Need for better-trained staff to support immigrant and refugee students.
- Lack of information on career pathways and educational choices for this demographic.
